NKTs (Natural Killer T cells) are a group of innate-like lymphocytes that are classified as unconventional cells belonging to the CD3(+)/TCR(+)/T lymphocytes. Recent studies have defined their role in immune surveillance and as effector cells. Through the engagement of the TCR, NKTs can recognize cell stress and different types of danger signals that occur during viral infection and also those that are consequent to an inappropriate immune response. Because of their dual functionality, NKTs respond both to activating signals from an antigen-presenting cell and to inhibitory signals, delivered through CD94 and NKG2A receptors. This double feature leads to different modes of NKTs activation, which are either "type 1" or "type 2". In humans, these NKTs subtypes display different functional features, as they can produce different cytokines, cytotoxic molecules and Th1 and Th2 like cytokines. These NKTs, via their cytokines production, are important regulators of the immunity. The activation of NKTs by the engagement of the CD94 and NKG2A receptors, may be important in two different settings of diseases: in chronic autoimmune diseases, where the disease is dependent on T cells or in acute inflammatory disorders. In the context of rheumatoid arthritis (RA) or ankylosing spondylitis (AS) diseases, NKTs may exert regulatory or pro-inflammatory effects. In this review, we will focus on the role of NKTs, their cytokine production and function in RA and AS, discussing whether they can be considered as disease biomarkers.Q: How to replace unwanted braces with parenthesis?
