What's New in the XSortLab?

xSortLab is a free sorting tool for Windows, that lets you view and perform various sorting methods. The application shows you just how many comparison and copy operations have been made in the selection, bubble, insertion, merge and quicksort methods. It also shows you how much time it took to perform these sorting methods. You can use xSortLab for educational purposes to make a course. The tool consists of two modes: * A "Visual Sort" mode that shows you the position of the items in a list. * A "Time Sort" mode that shows you the time that the sorting took to complete. Features: ===== - Sort on several columns: You can sort on columns and groups. - Sort by names: You can sort the items by their names. - Sort items in groups: You can divide the items in groups and sort the groups. - Sort items in subgroups: You can divide the items in groups and sort each group. - Sort on several columns and groups: You can sort by names and on several columns. - You can sort the items either in ascending order or descending order. - You can sort the items in ascending or descending order by column, group or subgroup. - You can change the view of the items to show only the column, group, or subgroup that you want. - You can select the type of sorting method that you want to use to sort the items. - The application shows the number of operations and time that each of the sorting methods has taken. - You can change the time intervals for which the operations and time will be recorded. - You can turn the function "Inform" on/off.
